VANDERBILT.

His Proposed Donation of $5,000,000 For an Art Gallery.

Various Points of Interest Concern ing the Richest Man in America.

His Intimates, His Peculiarities, and Personal Characteristics.

New York, Jan. 4.- "Gath" says: Taking a cide with a wealthy man, who has had close colations with the Vanderbilt family for eevscal years, he gave me some interesting informution, which I communicate:

-Have you heard anything," said I, "about William II. Vanderbilt considering the gift of in art gallery to New York city?"

Toy; it has not been put in the newspapers that I have seen, but he has mentioned it to a tew friends. Upper Fifth avenue has been very boautifully built up, and Mr. Vander-pill's new houses there become the signal for the most remarkable instances of private abusehold construction in the new world. The beautiful cathedral in white marble, with the shields of the United Stales and of the city of New York set over its portals, is, of course, the centre of this lavish private ornamentation. In the rear of this cathedral the cardinal has built his palace, also in white marble; and there you see Mr. Field's great square house, with one wing exteriorly completed, sheltering itself baltind the cathedral-The Buckingham hotel, with its elegant facado and the statue of the great duke of Buckingham over the portal, completes a third side of the cuthedral. But on the fourth side is an agiy tot, comprising a whole square, with a high stone wall and an old oblong brick building, which is an injury to the avenue-not so much to the residents there as to the general brightness and beauty of the city, where Americans present their best fronts to stran-

"Mr. Vandorbilt is not a professional philanthropist or present-maker. I suppose that it was the existence of this eye-sore which suggested to him a mild and agreeable form of benefaction. He has said that if this square, which belongs to the city of New York, can be transferred by some action of the city, under some pleasant compromise with the Catholic institution, he would give New York an art gallery which would more than match the gift of the Aster library by the Astor family to this city. I think ho has said that he would spend as much as five millions of dollars to put up the building and fill it with paintings worthy of the taste and wealth of New York City. But I would not be surprised if the people would themselves spoil this good intontion by immediately instispoil this good intomion by immediately instituting a series of criticisms and quartels about it. They will begin to intimate that Mr. Vanderbilt only wants to improve his property. It is so easy to say exasporating things about a man with the crime of Mr.
Yanderbilt's wealth that nearly everybody goes into training to get them off.

My informant then surprised me by the following statement:

lowing statement:
"You are aware that William Vandorbilt has rever little interest now in the New York Control railroad?"

tral railroad."
I said that it was the general opinion that he sweed very near the majority of the stock, he and his connection.

"My information is protty straight, I think," said my friend. "Vandorbilt has sold large blocks of the New York Central stock to Englishmen. In his recent frequent visits to the other side he has made a strong class of acquaintances, and has frankly said that he did not care to carry so much stock, even in the railroad his father acquired, as it embroiled him with the lobby at Albany, and made him not care be carry so men stock, over a the railroad his father admired, as it embroiled him with the lobby at Albany, and made him the personal target for the inevitable quarrels that sprang up between such a railroad and the numberless here cities through whose sentre it passes. His frankness was more potential than artifice, and the linglish leaders gladly made purchases of large blocks of Central. Considerable interests in the same railroad have been sold to the Americans. Mr. Vanderbilt, of course, will retain the presidency of the road, and it can be in his family as long as he likes, since all these new interests desire him to stay where he is. My own belief is that Mr. Vanderbilt has been wiser than his openies, and his discounted the Influence that the West Shore railroad is going to have on the business of the New York central. While not the brightest man in the world, William Vanderbilt has pretty good sagueity. He has seen the West Shore railroad overcoming its obstacles and croeping along the brink of the tide, and he, so har from getting in the way, faciliated the building of the road by selling it his useless branch from Athens to Schenetats and he could not alterd to fight it octacy at a small figure. This rairroad he know, had the means to go right through the state, and he could not afford to fight it because the large cities on his line demanded some composition. He, therefore, took his money out of the Contral and put it into other things.

money out of the Contral and put it into other things.

"Who is the nearest individual to Mr. Vanderbilt in friendship and confidence?"

"Fostor Dowey. He is a comparatively young man, of rather juvenile appearance, it came from the interior of New York state, somewhere about Lockport, I think. He is a man of somewhat sporting propensities, willing to bot his money on elections, on a game of eards or any other general contingency. But he is both acute and gentle. No circumstance over happened to make him lose But he is both acute and gentle. No circumstance over happened to make him less his temper. He is therefore, a winning man with Mr. Vanderbilt, who likes his friends to be plain and strong, sweat and sharp, and to keep faith. Dowey goes with Mr. Vanderbilt on all his excursions, drives with him on the road, and he is also a rich man, though I think he gots no other benefit from Mr. Vanderbilt's company than to take chances with him. Vanderbilt often loses money, like other persons. Dowey has to risk his along with his friend. Mr. Dewey, not long ago made $1,200,000 in western restread operation."

"Its Vanderbilt an educated man?"

"Not much. He can talk very well, however. His father was guilty of a gross injury to him

"Is Vanderbilt an educated man?"

"Not much. He can talk very well, howover. His father was guilty of a gross injury to him by meanly keeping him on the little old farm within sight of New York, and making him stay there till he was a man of more than forty years old, under the old-fashioned delusion that it you keep a child hungry he will deserve fortune better. Consequently the time William Vanderbilt whould have spent at college he had to spend throwing up hay and shoveling dung. He regrets the loss of better educational advantages, but he has picked up a good deal from intercourse, and from the refitting instincts of his wife, who is the best person that has ever entered into that family. Sho was, I beliove, a clorgyman's daughter, or something of that kind. Yanderbilt takes great pleasure in his family at home. They are as happy a family as their old Dutch ancestors in the valley of the Hudson river, where diverces were never known.

"William Vanderbilt, with the means he possesses, might be a very injurious man, to his times by the had oxample he would set. On the contrary, I think he does as little evil with that oril amount of money as almost any man that could be picked out of the United States. He does not belong to anything rare in the human type, is moderately worldly, is a little timid, has his fear, perhaps, that he may be a failure in life, or even lose his property; but, take him all in all, he has preserved the vacalth his father left him as successfully as any man you might select, and made it the loast possible in-might select, and made it the least possible infliction, porhaps, or other people. There is nothing whatever affected about him. He loses his temper sometimes, and can be very severe for a few minutes; but he rather re-rets it afterward. I have heard men say and when he got your ne come make them feel meaner by his remarks than any other person in the world could do." "What kind of children has he—his sons, for

"As to that, it is the current impression that the ablest son he has is Cornelius Vanderbilt. To that I outer an objection. I think it is a misfortune that Mr. Vanderbilt's oldest son is To that I outer an objection. I think it is a misfortune that Mr. Vanderbilt's oldest son is got William K., who is less popular than Condition but possesses more grit. None of the Vandarbilt boys have gonics. Cornelius's entirely a man of routine afraid to take the responsibility, and with locision only in ordinary things. He is good young man, perhaps thirty-one years of age. Like all the Vanderbilt sons and sons-in-law, Cornelius goes to his work and carries on his part of the state and his enterprises. He has a rather happy mannor of greeting people. William K. rather ranks as a snot. He has a rather happy mannor of greeting people. William K. rather ranks as a snot. He is particular in his dross and addross, not demonstrative, and governed to some extent. I think, by his wife, who is a southern woman with a good deal of tyle about her. At the present time, for interest, Lord and Lady Manderbilt, But I think that Mr. Vanderbilt has more conditioned in the force of character of William K. than of any of his sous. I will give you an intance: During the railroad war in the wost some time age Wm. Vanderbilt was in Europe. Went was sent from St. Louis and Kansas City that the rates were being cut, and asking whether the Central road and its connections should not also cut rates. The disputed left hat his father was on his way home, and would arrive in about a week, and that important question would be settled. Plant is always his remark: I must see my attent that is always his remark: I must see my attent heart of the creates were the form of commodore Vanderbilt was cortainly one of the createst went to force and make a modern.

"How doos William Vanderbilt compare with his father?"

"Commodore Vanderbilt was cortainly one of the createst went to force and make a monter."

his father?"
"Commodore Vanderbilt was certainly one of his fathor?"

"Commodore Vanderbilt was cortainly one of the greatest men to foresee and make property in this or any other country. A man who was first successful on the ocean, and then equally so on the land, must have been above the common. But he was a very timid man at times. Even his second wife used to have to swab his head with water and alcohol when certain movements were made against his stocks and interests on the stroct. He had times when he thought he was going to die a beggar."

"Is there any truth in the idea that this tady is going to marry Goneral Beauregard?"

"I think not. She was a sort of cousin of Vanderbilt, and he first intended to marry her mother; but, getting a sight of the daughter, he sont the old lady off to the South to attend to something, and while she was gone married the daughter. William Vanderbilt is very reverent to his father's memory. Not long ago gentlerna told him an unectote about Jay Gould in his earlier days, when advised to see Commodore Vanderbilt, replying: Why, what is the use of that! He has got so much money that he would out me up." William heard the tale and said, with a twinkle of his eyes: "Then there was one man that Gould was really afraid of."

"What does Vanderbilt think of Gould?"

"What does Vanderbilt think of Gould?"

"He does not more than half like Gould.

taie and said, with a twinkle of mis eyes: Then there was one man that Gould was really afraid of.!"

"What does handerbilt think of Gould," "He does not more than half like Gould. He says that Gould deceives when there is no necessity for it, and keeps his acquaintances suspicious of him when he might just as well have at loast a part of their confidence. Vanderbilt knews that Gould is a rather extraordinary man, but the two men differ very much. Gould is a schemer; Vanderbilt is an investor. Gould is all the while in litigation; Vanderbilt does not much trouble the courts. Vanderbilt always hays first-class property; Gould always they sheet has property; Gould always this speculations. You will hear many a man on Wall street say: 'the told me that such a stock was going up, and, dann him, it's going down.' You must consider Vanderbilt as yor would Bismarck, or some of the ruling state-enon of the different large countries. Nobody says Bismarck to his contemporatios, and often covers his tracks or reverses his snow shoes. So with a man having such great interests as William Vanderbilt, he does not betray his place to his contemporatios, and often covers his tracks or reverses his snow shoes. So with a man having such great interests as William Vanderbilt, he does not feel his canilly, who has his entire confidence to anybody wholly. That is a feature about him that I had omitted to give you. There is no person in this world, cortainly nobody outside of his family, who has his entire confidence. He likes people, but never gives himself away thoroughly to any one. If he did, he might have wasted evan the great patrimony he in-boried, and received nothing from the general community but pity and contempt." borited, and received nothing from the general community but pity and contempt,"

MICHIGAN.

Progress of the Senatorial Contest.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 4.—Both branches of the legislature convened at noon yesterday. from the election of Squator Cheboygan, as president pro tem of the senate, and George H. Hopkins as speaker pro tem, of the house, no business was transacted other than that incident to organization. The senatorial fight grows warmer every hour, and is now being waged at its fiercest. Each side appears to be equally confident. Early last evening the anti-caucus or Hubbell mon, positively claimed that sixtoon members and sonators had signed an agreement not to go into any cancus until it was agreed that 57 votes should nominate. Later this was denied and it was reported that several of the anti-cancus men had weakened and gone over to Forry. This is positively denied by the Hubbell men. They claim that the sixteen had grown to nineteen and that by to-day the number will be materially increased. A prominent Hubbellite said that this had ceased to be a personal fight. The people of the, state were of the opinion that the election of Ferry would widen the bench in the Republican ranks, and two years hence Michigan would furnish a reportion of the Ponnsylvania rout. He added that there was no danger of this, however, as Mr. Ferry was now victually out of the race. As to who their candidate is he said: "We will do away with the statesman with the flowing heard, and then see what oup be done." The Ferry faccion still say that they have made great gains, and that a cancus will be had to-night which will moinate their man. They claim they are proceeding in the regular way, that any other noticed is irregular, for which the participants will be held reasonable. that sixteen members and senators had signed method is irrogular, for which the participants will be held responsible.

BEHIND THE BARS.

Arrest of the Author of the Little Rideau, Canada, Butchery, Near Montreal.

An Account of the Slaughter, Narrated by One of the Survivors. MONTREAL, Jan. 4.—The carnage at Little Rideau has caused a sensation throughout the dominion, and one hears nothing but vengeance declared against the hidoous murderer. A visit to the acone of the tragedy shows plainly how excited the inhabitants are and how rostless they will remain until the crimjust is in the hands of justice. The home of the unfortunate Cooke family is immediately opposite the village of Greece's Point, on the other side of the Ottawa river, in Little Rideau. The house is of stone, surrounded by large open fields. The doctors testified at the inquest that an attempt at rape had been made on Emma Cooke, the first victim supposed to have been killed, consequently it is the general opinion that Mann in attempting his vile purpose killed her. The evidence proved she died by strangulation, and it is presumed that when he put the noose which caused death around her neck he did not intend to kill her. Finding her dead, he seems to have become convinced that the only way of escaping detoction was to do away with the whole family. In an interview with Margaret Cooke, s young lady survivor, she said her first intimation of trouble was a loud shriot or moan from her brother George's room, which awakened both her and her sister Fannie. Rushing into the room in which her brother George slept, she found Georgo in bed severely wounded. The two brothors slept in different beds, and the noise made by George had roused William, and when the two sisters enfored they found William, who had been struck on the head with the axused on his brother in a desperate oncounter with the young servant, Froderick Mann. She did not hesitate a moment, but threw horsoit into the struggle, and caught the uplitted ax, which her brother was ondeavoring to keep from striking him in the face. Man nfought her sister Fannie to the rescue, and then there were two girls and a wounded man against the villian. It was a desporate struggle and in the severity of it the bed was overturned, with its living and dead occupants, and all were thrown out upon the floor. The brave little horoins triumphed, and wrenched the ax from Mann. William lay upon the floor and the murderer stood confronting the girl armed with the ax uplifted against him. "What do you mean?" should Fannie, but Mann seized a lamp, being still bont upon murder. The giels then determined to withdraw. Maggle shouled to Fannie to escape through the window into an adjoining room, but before she could get away Mann had seized the lamp-stand and hurled it at her, striking her on the ear. He then turned and fled down the stairs, when the girls determined to go for help. On reaching the front door Maggle was again encountered by the fiend who menaced her from the kitchen door with a poker. Luckily Miss Pratt, the school toaclor, was passing, and Maggie called to her to go for assistance. The Euron, Ross and Kirby families, all of whom reside quite near, were soon on the spot. Barron armod will a dirk knife, and Itoss armed was done at once. Framie Cooke Hes in bud saddled a horse and was off for medical assistance, which was at hand as soon as possible. All that could be done for relief was done at once. Framie Cooke Hes in bud shock. Maggie is able to sit up, and though wounded in the shoulder in the struggle is able to converse with friends. William Cooke's injuries are believed fo be fatal, and at midday he was sinking. Goo

POSTAL CLERK ARRESTED,

Caught With a Bundle of Decoy Letters.

Sr. Louis, Jan. 4.—B. Falkenhalmer, railway postal clerk, in charge of the transfer ser-Yico of the union depot, this city, was arrested yesterday morning by Inspector Dice, of the special postal service. He is charged with holding a bundle of letters addressed to Agent Boardman, of the Louisville lottory, and to The Courier-Journal. They were decoy letters. He should have placed them in the Ohio & Mississippi mail. The letters were found lying on the counter in his office. Falkenhainer declares the package was simply overlooked, and that he intended returning it to the St. Lonis of the factor of the counter of the factor. and must no managed routining fit of the St. Solid office for transmission last night; but the authorities seem to be confident of his guilt. He has been seventeen years in the service, and was formerly registry clerk of the St. Louis postoflice. He is highly connected.

The house finalled its organization yesterday morning according to the determination of the kepublican caucus, and is now ready for business. The roturns of the late election were canvassed. His Funeral Will Be Attended With Honor Due His Rank.

Paris, Jan. 4 .- The result of the autopsy on the body of Gambetta shows that he succumbed not directly to the wound made by the pistol-ball, but to an antecodont diseased condition, which sooner or later, must have proven fatal under any slight de-termining influences. As to the wound itself it was completely cicatrized. After the autopsy it was decided that it would be neceasary to embalm the body a second timebut the embalmers could not be found, and

but the embalmers could not be found, and the friends of Gamberta insisted that there should be no further delay, and that the body should be placed in the colin. This evouing it will be brought to Paris, and will be deposited in the Palais Bourbon in a salloux specially prepared for it.

The profect of Nice has telegraphed to say that M. Gambetta pore has at last consented that the funeral shall take place in Paris, and it has accordingly been arranged for Saturday. It has been decided that the deceased shall be intered with all the honors due to a chief of the state, as during the national defense he expressed all the authority of a president of the republic. All the public departments will be represented at the funeral, and the whole of the troops of Paris and Versailles will be drawn out for the ceremony. The body will be intered in Pere la-Chaise, but it is not improbable that it will be afterwards exhumed and removed to Nice. There is a question of mising a subscription for a national monument to the deceased waterman.

The timeral of Cambotta has been postponed until Saturday. Brisson and Jules Perry are among the speakers.

THE YEAR'S FAILURES

Statement of the Business Fallures of 1892, and Compared with Previous Years.

Now York, Jan. 4 .- The morcantile failarea for the year just closed, as reported by the mercantile agency of R. G. Dun & Co., are for the United States, 6,738 in number, as Against 5.582 in 1881; liabilities for the year, $101,000,000, as compared with $81,000in 1881. The failures in Canada the iast year are 787, with liabilities of $8,500,-000, as against 635 in 1881, with liabilities of $5,500,000. Business men do not look upon these figures as unfavorable although the failures last year show a considerable increase over any year since 1880 in comparison with 1378 and 1879. There has been a large gain in the number engaged in trade, and the volume of trade shows a great increase. In view of these facts the failures proportionately are nothing like so great as in 1879. The number of failures in 1882 is estimated at one in every 122 persons, while the failures in 1878 showed one in every sixty-four persons.

B. G. Dun & Co. have brought the list of full area flown to the close of the year 1882, thus securing great accuracy in the statements given out. Their circular refers to the large extension in the lines of credit in the last few extension in the lines of credit in the last few years, resulting from undue anxisty to dispose of goods without sufficiently careful security as to the ability to pay for them, which is directly traceable to overproduction in the manufacturing centres, in anticipation that the volume of business would be maintained at a ratio of increase as great as that which marked the recovery from the years of depression, economy and restricted beginess, to a state of the highest prosperity. Les, however, it is stated, is the only sinister reature in the prospect; for, while the trade of the country is reported, not to be in the most healthy or desirable condition, the country itself was never more presperous. The power of absorption by consumers, and their ability to pay, is now believed to be in greater proportion to the volume of indebtodness than over before.

BLOOMINGTON, Jan. 4.—A very brilliant and beautiful meteor was discovered about 6.30 last evening. It was first discovered near the planet Jupitor, and flashed in a southeasterly direction across the sky, lighting up everything for several seconds with the greatest brilliancy. The head of the motoer had the brilliant, clear appearance of an electric light, and was followed by a train of brilliant blood red, much like the tail of a rocket.

WEST BEND, Wis, Jan. 4.—Au exceedingly large and luminous meteor shot across the southern heavens, at 6.45, going west. Its brilliancy caused objects to cast a shadow, and bright traces of its track could be seen half an hour after it had disappeared.

FAIRTURY, III., Jan. 4.—A very brilliant meteoric display was witnessed by a number of our clizens last, evening about 7 o'clock. The meteor's course was from northeast to southwest, and left a bright trail which was visible for twenty minutes.

After the Quacks.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 4.—The Illinois board of health has driven from the state thirty-one persons who falsely made oath that they were graduates of foreign medical universities. The latest case was that of a barber named Lambrecht, who butchered a methor and her anborn babe at Collinsville. He personated Dr. Henry A. Luders, from Gottengen, now dead, and presented his diploms.

Carifole and Williams.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The Critic says: If the Ron. John G. Carlisle is a candidate for speaker, it is probable that he will withdraw from the senatorial race in Kentucky next winter to succeed Cerro Gordo Williams. The Kentucky: legislature will have to commence balloting on the very day that the speaker should be elected. If Mr. Carlislo then is not a candidate, there is not much doubt but that Gen. Williams will succeed himself, as the formar in the carlot that he was the formar in the carlot was the the carlot. former is the only man that has any show whatever of success against Mr. Williams, although Joe Blackburn would no doubt make an effort to have himself transforred to the other end of the capitol. ILLINOIS.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 4 -The senate was called to order at 12 o'clock yesterday by Lieut. Gov-John M. Hamilton. The prayer was eloquently and fervently uttered by Rev. Mr. Parker, of the First Methodist church. The secretary pro tem, of [the organization was directed to call the roll of hold-over sonators. All answered to their names. The list of sonators-elect was then called, and they were requested to take a position at the bar of the senate preparatory to having administered to them the oath of office. The list was reported complete, whereupon Chief Justice Scott administered the eath.

Senator White then moved to postpone the permanent organization of the sonate until immediately after the reading of the journal this morning. As the clerk at first figured the vote stood years 27, mays 24. It was subsequently claimed that there was a wrong footing, and that it should be yeas 24 and mays 27 The record showed that Sonators White, Ma mer, Rice, Ruger, Snyder, Whiting and Clough had voted with the Democrats. The president ruled that it should stand as presented by the clerk in the last instance.

The senators were then given an opportunity to choose their seats, with the exception of Senators Archer, Wright and Whiting, who by virtue of their seniority were given first choice. On motion of Senator Kelly, of Adams, the senator after being in session one hear adjourned to meet this morning.

At high noon, Secretary of State Doment, called the house to order. Rev. Dr. Poss, of Springfield, invoked the divine blessing upon the assemblage, and Dement formally declared the thirty-third general assembly of the state of Illinois open for the transaction of business. James H. Paddock stopped to the clork's desk and called the roll. Every member responded. Mr. Fuller, of Beone, obtained the floor, and nominated as temperary speaker, Thomas F. ### An Exciting Passage Between Judge!

Washington, Jan. 4.—In the star-route ease, yesterday, Mr. Chandler moved to havethe verdict of the jury in the last trial formally entered on the records of the court. He wanted it in the clark's record, particularly that part declaring Pack not guilty. Mr. Merrick read from the printed report to show the jury had not found any verdict as to: Pock. Mr. Chandler restated the grounds of his motion and commented sharply on the course of the presecution. Judge Wylle said: This is most extraordinary talk. It is a right recognized as belonging to every court to send back a jury to reconsider a verdict if the court back a jury to reconsider a verthet if the court is not satisfied." Mr. Chandler did not deny it, but said the jury was not sent back and did not amend its verdict. The judge said the court understood, the matter perfectly, and proceeded to state the facts as to the action of the jury in relation to Peck, and the court's action on the same. Mr. Chandler attempted to make a remark when Judge Wylio said: "I insist that counsel should not interrupt the court. Twill not allow it, full not be talked.

"I insist that counsel should not interrupt the court. I will not allow it. I will not be talked down by counsel."

Mr. Chandlor—Have I not the right?

Judge Wylie—You have not the right, sir. Take your seat, sir. The marshal will see that the gentleman takes his seat. The court will neither be talked down nor be browbeaten by anybody. [To Chandler, I Now, sir, you will understand your position, and mine, too. I say there was no verdict rendered in regard to Pock. The verdict that was rendered and recorded said nothing in relation to him. There recorded said nothing in relation to him. There is, therefore, nothing for the court to pass upon. I regret that coursel should have forced the court to take an apparently hardle course, which the court has deemed to be necessary; which the contents defined to be necessary; but we must have order here: Coursel made a speech in an inflammatory way, not in the usual method, addressing the court on a question of law. When the court proceeded to make its decision counsel interrupted the court and again reported an assertion, which is contradicted by all the facts as published in the report. I must assert and reported the author. report. I must assort and protoct the authority of the court. I over-rule the motion.
Chandlor—I take exception.

AN HOUR OF TERROR.

I found myself on the following morning looking into the mirror to see whether or not my hair had turned white, and I have often wondered since how I ever managed to come through it safely; but I did somehow, and am here now to tell you about it, if you will be patient and

I was just sixteen years of age, and the youngest of a large family, all of whom had married and left home but myself. We were residing in the country, and I had never wished to leave my quiet home until after that oventful night of which I am about to tell you. My mother used to call me her "tomboy" daughter, and indeed, if it had not been for my accomplishments in this direction. I hardly know how I should have taken care of myself on that night -as you will observe when I have finished.

My father was a physician, and had been called to the bedside of a patient who was expected to die every moment, consequently we did not expect him back until some time the next day.

My mother had dismissed all the servants for the night and closed the doors. It was past our usual bed time, but we were both deeply absorbed in our new books, and seemed indisposed to retire.
At last, however, mother closed her book, and said it was time we were in bed, as we were expecting my brother and his wife to arrive the next morning at about three o'clock, and would be called up to meet them. I had just placed my novel on the table, and was leaning back to enjoy a huge yawn, when the gate opened and some one came rapidly up the walk to the porch. The next moment there was a loud knock at the door, and mother and I looked at each other a moment, as if wondering who could be coming in at such a late hour.

"Some one has sent for your father. I guess," said mother, going to her room door which opened into the hall. "Who's there?" she inquired; I heard the voice of my brother-in-law, who lived about a mile from us, saying that his wife was quite ill, and he had come for father.

Of course I was sorry for my sister's illness, but at the same time was glad that the caller was not an intruder, as I had at first feared. When mother informed him that father was away, he asked her if she would not return home with him, as she might be able to render my sister some relief.

Of course she could not r I was to be left alone, for I could not possibly leave home, also, on account of my brother and his wife, and I should be compelled to remain at home to re-

Perhaps I was more easily frightened than most girls of my age, but the fact that I was "the baby of the family," and had never been left alone at night, I think quite sufficient reason for my failing.

After seeing mother safely off I fastened the door, and taking my book, went up-stairs to my own room, where I determined to spend the remainder of the night reading -at least, until my brother and wife came at three.

A door opened from my room upon a little balcony, into which one from the hall also opened. This I left ainr to admit fresh air, as I knew there could be no possible means of reaching it from the porch below, except by a long ladder.

I could not center my thoughts upon the words before me, although I had been very much interested before mother left. I would start and listen at the least sound I heard. Once I laid aside my book, and going to the back window, looked down toward the servant's houses to see if they had all retired. Everything was dark and still, and I again decided to be as brave as possible, and forget all about robbers and ghosts; and so, after satisfying myself once more that there was no one in the closet, or wardrobe, or under the bed, I took possession of my book and sat down to read.

I managed to read a chapter or two, and again I found myself peering out through the window down into the gar-den, and trying to form the dancing shadows there into human forms making their stealthy way through the

. I was about to turn my eyes to my book once more when I saw something that caused me to start and look more closely. Yes, it was, indeed, a man crossly. Its, it was, indeed, a man erceping cautiously along behind the hedge towards the servants' houses. Who could it be? The servants had said nothing the night before about leaving, and it was something unusual for one of them to keep such things a secret, as they seemed to take delight in making known their pleasure trips to us for several days before they were to take place. Even if it was one of them, why should he be so careful to get to his house? And why had he come in through the garden instead of the

I watched him until he reached the garden gate, and opening it stepped into the back vard. He paused and looked about in every direction, and I saw him peering up through the branches of the trees towards the window near. which I stood. Shading my eyes, I looked more closely to see if I could tell who it was, but could not. He wore a large, broad-brimmed black hat and a long coat. He seemed to be gazing up at my window for a full minute, and. then he stepped hastily across the yard and disappeared around the house. I hurried to the back window in time to see him enter the house of Uncle Ben, our old gardener. "Pshaw" I said to myself • It's nobody but Uncle Ben, after all. Been over to see some neighbors and come home late."

But still I was not exactly satisfied, for I kept on thinking about the manner in which he had come to the house. It was just 12:30. Mercy! what was I to do with the remainder of the time till three o'clock came? When the excitement occasioned by the appearance of the figure in the garden had subsided a little, my cyclids began it, the chin rested on my chest, and I was fast asleep, When I awoke, it was with a sudden start, and I almost sprang to my feet. I wondered why I had been aroused so suddenly, and listened intently to see if | my anxiety to watch his movements I the sound or whatever it was would be

All was as still as death. Nothing to meet my listening ear save the mournful breeze as it gently rustled the leaves outside my window; and the faint tick, tick, of the large clock in the halldown stairs. Yes, a cricket was chirping from the hearth, and I could hear the weird, lonely hoot of an owl from the neighboring wood. A thrill ran through me. Everything scemed so completely forsaken—so quiet and desolate. Looking at my watch I discovered that it was exactly two o'clock, and indeed, was surprised to learn that I had been asleep so long. Another hour before my brother would come. I thought it would never do to allow myself to fall asleep again, and remembering that there were some apples in the closet, I started to get one, hoping it would assist me to keep awake. I had just stooped over the basket when I heard a strange, grinding, cutting sound, very low, but distinct. I turned to listen, and it came to my ear louder I asked myself if it could be a huge rat cutting his way into the pantry below, but the next instant this hope was driven from me, for the noise was evidently made by something larger than a rat. Some one was trying to affect an entrance.

Oh, Heaven, what could I do? Suppose it were a robber attempting to make an entrance into the house? What would become of me? I shuddered and stood like one riveted to the floor. I felt the perspiration stealing out upon my forehead in great, hot beads, and almost heard my heart beating. Again I listened in breathless suspense. The sound was unmistakable this time, and that it was an intruder I did not doubt. trying to cut his way through some of tlie blinds below.

There were guns in the house, and I could handle one about as well as any country girl; but the fact was they were all down stairs in the pantry, and if I attempted to go after one I might rush into the very arms of a burglar. Besides. I did not know where the pantry key was. Perhaps it was in the sitting room, where mother sometimes kept it, or perhaps in her room; but in what exact place? Alas! may be she had taken it away in her pocket! So there was no hope of obtaining a gun, and the only thing remaining for me to do was to try and make my escape. But

The thought struck me that I might extinguish the light and hide myself; but then I should run the risk of being discovered and perhaps killed.

I was, indeed, in a state of perplexity, and asked myself what should I do. The sound still grew louder. Whoever the intruder was, he was cortainly getting bolder.

Lunfastened my shoes and carefully slipped them off, then blew out the light, and cautiously making my way to the door which opened into the balcony, stood just inside and listened. Yes, it was most certainly at one of the front windows! Lying down on the floor, I crawled to the edge of the balcony and | Fard. peeped carefully over at the windows of my mother's room.

I could see no one, but I could hear the noise much plainer. I then made my way to the other end of the balcony, and looked over in the same manner. to my inexpressible horror, I saw the dark figure of a man at one of the par-lor windows. If he once managed to get in, he could go all through the house except in the pantry.

I saw in an instant that it was the man whom I had seen in the yard. Could it be that our old gardener had fearned of father's and mother's absome and meant to take advantge of it to rob our house? I could searcely believe it, for we had always reposed such confidence in Uncle Ben that I did not believe him capable of such a

The noise ceased for a moment, and looking closely I saw him thrust his hand in through the hole he had cut and unfasten the blinds. Opening them he tried the window, but fortunately it could not be lifted from the outside. He then set to work with his knife again to cut out the sash.

How I shuddered. He would soon be in, and what would become of me? Could I make my way down stairs and out of the back door before he cut through? Was there nothing I could do to prevent him from taking away my mother's valuables? There were several handsome articles of silver in the parlor, besides all the table silver on the side-board in the hall. If I could get out I might send for help before he had sufficient time to make away with the stolen property. I spent little time, however, in planning for their safety. I was wondering how I was to take care of myself.

I had crep b back to my room door, and stood looking around for some means of escape. The noise had ceased altogether now, and stepping back to the edge of the balcony. I looked over —and the man had disappeared. He had succeeded in entering the parlor window:

There was no possible means of getting out by the lower story now, for the stairs went down enmediately at the parlor door, and I could not escape being seen should I attempt to descend. I had almost made up my mind to jump from the balcony into the porch, but it was a foolish thought, for it was entirely too high, and I would be sure to break a limb or sprain my ankle, and thus throw myself into the villain's power. Once more I turned into my room, and my brain was in such a whirl that I could think of no course to pursue— nothing but to stand and listen. My heartfluttered. I heard a soft step on the stair, and the next moment saw a light thrown upon the wall in the entry. He was coming.

I wrung my liands and glanced hurriedly about. Must I hide myself between the feather-bed and mattress! Good Heaven: I hadn't time for that, for he was half way up the stairs.

The closet door stood open, and springing to it I took out the key, and stepping in, closed the door, locking it on the inside. Peeping through a knot-hole, I saw the dark form of a man stepping cautiously across the hall to my room, holding a small lantern in his hand. When he stood on the threshold, to threw the light in and peered anx

Coming into the room he examined the bed-he even stopped and looked under it, then turned to the table and stood looking at my book and the lamp, as if trying to solve some mystery. He turned over one of my shoes with his foot, and glanced up at the open door.

Mercy! could it be that he was searching for me? If so, he would not fail to examine the closet and if he should succeed in opening it—alas! I pressed my hand involuntarily upon my heart to quiet its wild throbbing.
"Woll," I heard him mutter from beto get heavy, and almost before I knew neath his mask, "I am sure I heard a noise as I was coming up. She must be here somewhere, for there was a light burning in here. If I could only find her—but it may be that—"

Again he glanced up at the door. In rubbed against the key, and it fell to the floor with a loud ring. Instantly his gaze was rivited upon the closet door as he came slowly toward it. Taking hold of the bolt, he shook it gently and then stood very quiet for some time, as if listening. "Yes," he said at length, "I saw a bunch of keys down stairs somewhere, and I guess I can find one to fit this lock; if I don't, I can make use of these tools on it."

So saying, he turned away, and as he went into the half I heard him shut my door and look it on the outside.

I felt for the key on the floor, and hastily opening the closet, stood and listened in breathless suspense. a bold, heavy step he descended into the hall, and although I had not recognized him as such, I now firmly believed him to be no other than our gardener, for he seemed to be aware that I was the only occupant of the house, and to believe that he had me securely locked in my room; but, strange to say, he had forgotten door leading into the balcony, and stepping cut, I again looked about me for some means of escape.
I tried the front hall door, and to my delight found it unfastened. From it a little flight of stairs led up into a room in the roof, where there were two dormer windows.

Hastening up these steps, I raised one of the windows and stepped out upon the roof, lowering the sash after me. The moon was shining brilliantly, and I looked up and down the road to see if any object was in sight; but not a moving object could I discern from among the clustering shadows and bushes.
Once more I listened, and heard the intruder coming up the first stairway, and knew he was coming to break into the closet. I had been thoughtful enough to lock it when I came out, in order to keep him employed as long as possible, hoping aid might arrive before he was gone.

He completed his task at the lock with remarkable quickness for I heard him come into the hall with a distinct onth, and start to come up the second flight of stairs.

Dear me! Would be suspect what I had done, and come out on the roof to look for me? Perhaps he and heard me raise the window. Running to the far end of the house,

I saw the limb of a tree extending out quite near the edge of the roof, and thought perhaps I might swing down by it. It was very small and weak, and I was almost afraid to risk it; but perhaps it would sustain my weight until I could reach another limb. But suppose that it should break? The full would be quite sure to kill me.

I was almost ready to abandon the idea and make myself contented upon the roof until my brother came, allow, the robber to carry away everything in the house if he chose, when a loud rattle upon the dormer window aroused me, and without even thinking further of what might be the consequences, I took hold of the limb and stepped off the roof, swinging far out over the

As I looked down I grew faint, and came near letting go my hold. There I was hanging high up in the air, suspended by a frail limb, and to fall would be certain death.

Climbing hand over hand, I soon unk of the tree, where I let go my hold and caught on a large limb. Lowering myself from one branch to another until I reached the lowest limb. I stood for a moment, and looking back up at the roof, listened, to ascertain whether or not I was being pursued.

I could hear nothing, however, and, climbing carefully to the smallest end of the limb, I bent it down, and swinging off by my hands, reached the ground in safety.

The next thought was to seek assistance, so that the robber might be captured and our valuables recovered. I ran hastily to the house of our gar-dener, and finding the door slightly ziar, pushed it open and looked in at the bed. By the light of the moon failing upon it, I saw that it was unoccupied and had not even been disturbed. I had hoped that he was innocent, and that I should find him in his bed asleep: but I saw plainly now that my hopes were in vain.

I then went to our cook's room and called her. She sprang out of bed with a frightened exclamation and can to the door to know what I wanted. I told her in as few words as possible, asking her to go for our nearest neighbor, who lived about half a mile away from us. Of course she would, and while she drew on her clothes I took up an old gun from a corner of the room, and finding that it was loaded, hastened back to the house.

I stationed myself at the end of the porch, behind a clump of vines, and stood with my gun ready to shoot at the shortest notice. I could hear the intruder in the house, going up and down stairs, turning over chairs and keeping up a general racket. At last he appeared at the window, and stepping out upon the porch, stood looking up the Guess I'd better be gittin' way from here, 'cause that young miss has got out, and first thing I know somebody'll' be comin' in here to eat me up, skin and bone. I've got the money, anyway, and that's all I wanted, 'cept missus' watch and chain; but I'll git it some day."

He turned as if to leave, and I let him have a load from my gun in one of his legs. He fell to the floor with a terrible yell, and kept quiet. I thought if I could keep him, there until help came without taking his life. I should be satisfied.

Raising himself on his cloow with a moan he looked about and said-"Oh, I am shot! I'm killed! Please don't shoot me any more, and I'll give the money all back -every cent?'

I did not show myself, but prepared the other barrel to shoot, if it should become necessary. It did not, however, for it was not long before the cook returned, accompanied by our neighbor and his two sons, who took possession of the gentleman, and relieved me of my watching.

A few moments later my brother and his wife arrived, and I discovered that it had been exactly one hour since I was aroused from my slumber in my room.

The robber was none other than the old gardener, and he afterward confessed he knew father was not at home, and saw mother when she went away with my brother. He was very much in need of the money, he said, and determined to take advantage of the opportunity to go into the house and search for some. He also said that he meant to force me to tell him the whereabouts of father's money, but he said nothing about intending to take

The Clifford Case.

Judge Bennett has been occupied all day in listening to the arguments of the counsel in the Chilord case upon the motion for a new trial, which will occupy the rest of the day, and perhaps part of to-morrow morning. Mr. Butler spoke for three hours this morning, making an able argument upon the proposition that the verdict was cutirely unwarranted from the testimony in the case; and producing a mass of authorities in support of his position.

The defendant's counsel also introduced two affidavits in support of their motion, one made by the defendant; stating that shortly after the close of the trial, one of the jurors, William Humphrey, called upon him at the jail and he, the defendant, asked Humphrey how he could find him guilty of murder under the testimony; and that Humphrey replied that last summer he was out in Dakota and a man pointed a pistol at him, and he thought it was time that sort of thing was stopped and somebody made an example of. The other affidavit was by the turnkey at the jail, Mr. L. O. Robinson,

A WONDERFUL SUCCESS.

The Dickens' Party last Night at Cannon's Hall. A Brilliant Affair-The

In all the social history of Janesville there never was a party more talked about -- The Odd Fellows and their families than the Dickens' party given last even. ing at Cannon's hall by Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Stevens, and Mr. and Mrs. Pliny Norcross. Around it centered much more than common interest because it was the first Dicken's party ever given in this city, and each one who accepted an invitation to attend was expected to assume some character created by Dickens, and to wear a costume in keeping with that -Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Heimstreet went character. When the invitations were issued about three weeks ago the whole town began to talk about it. A number said the party would be a failure, and some had faith that it would be a success. As time passed, the interest in Dickens began to deepen. Dickens' dictionaries and Dickens' works got to be in great demand, and for the last week or so it seemed as if the whole town was studying Dickens. Those who had not read him and professed not to like him, began to read him, and if their words were honest, soon learned to like him-The party evening came, and there was a large attendance. The costumes were remarkably excellent in many cases, and the crowning feature of the occasion was the sociability and mirth which reigned supreme from eight o'clock till twelve-The following guests assumed the

Pr f. Severance's Dancing School. With the year eighteen hundred and eighty-three Professor A. B. Severance period the professor has had under his instruction bundreds of children, young ladies and gentlemen, and middle aged pupils, and the universal verdict of all is that he is the most successful teacher in the country. He not only teaches his pupils how to "trip the light funtastic toe," but instructs in all that is polite in society. The scholarship and attendance upon his school in this city have steadily increased from year to year, and is now larger than ever before, and the professor is therefore as well pleased with its success as his pupils and friends. Prof. Severance has been giving dancing lessons in this state for the past thirty-three years, and for the past seventeen years he has devoted his whole time to teaching. He organized water thirty-six years ago, and that band is still playing, being now located with headquarters in Milwaukee, and is composed of Messrs. A. B. and C. G. Severance, the Williams Brothers, and Prof. D. W. Ainsworth, the celebrated flutist, and are playing for parties in different parts of this state, Illinois, Iowa and Minnesota, every night.
